THE PATENT-OFFICE FIRE.

SCENES OF THE CONFLAGRATION—THE CONTEST WITH THE FLAMES—SCHUYLER MARTINEZING IN A WETTED

From our special Washington Correspondent.

Your correspondent chanced to be near the corner of 9th and F streets at the striking of the first alarm of fire in the Patent Office. Fugitive puffs of smoke were then issuing from various points—hardly sufficient in volume to attract the attention unless specially called to it—along the Southern third of the 9th street roof. An engine was quickly on the ground, then another, but the smoke had been ominously augmented in the meantime, and before the lapse of another five minutes, seemingly, fire was seen through a window under the portico and the blaze almost simultaneously leaped skyward through the roof. It is conceded that the fire started in or about the conservatory directly under the roof, near the S. W. corner. Nothing more explicit will likely be known as to its origin until an official investigation has been had—perhaps not then. It would be unfair to harshly criticise our usually very efficient fire department without a knowledge of all the facts, although to the impatient crowds that had by this time gathered the time consumed in getting the hose in position seemed very long, and impatience and nervous people were disposed to be censorious. Before 12 M., a general alarm of during every engine in town and George town into service, but been sounded, and telegrams sent to Alexandria and Baltimore for aid. The fire worked its way rapidly northward, licking up the vast accumulations of papers in the attic and the thousands of models displayed in their cases, on the 3d floor. The fire had been started at the junction of the west wing with the main building, on the southern side, but all efforts to moderate its fury in the other direction were fruitless, and by fearful strides it soon reached the street, and the entire western roof went down with a crash and vast showers of sparks and brands whirling upward. The air was filled with them, and with DeCampental records, and they finally lodged squares away. The flames turned the corner and rushed on towards 7th street with terrifying velocity, and all hope of saving any portion of the 3d floor was abandoned by all, even those of toutes le cœur. The wind which had been blowing moderately from the northwest now suddenly veered to the west, then southwest, once more raising hope. A determined front was opposed to the flames as they reached the 7th street wing and of the G street roof fell, somewhat lessening the terrible heat. The flames, however, fought inch by inch until it was finally brought under control, after having made half the circuit of the building in less than two hours. In fact, so long as the wind blew from the northwest, the firemen could only follow it up, in a helpless, aimless sort of way the intense heat precluding a near approach. How they succeeded in stopping it when they did is almost incomprehensible, as there was no valid ground to hope they could be got under control before having completed the destruction round of the entire 3d floor and all above it. Aid reached us from Alexandria about 1 o'clock P. M., she sending one steamer and one hook and ladder company. At 12 15 the urgent request for help had reached Baltimore and in 15 minutes several engines were at the depot, but for some unexplained reason the train to convey them here did not start till 1 00 o'clock and did not, according to the Star, reach here till 2 15. We cannot help remembering that a few years ago, when we were applied to under similar circumstances, we sent our firemen to Baltimore in 10 minutes. But so far as is known to the public, the B. & O. railroad officials are wholly responsible for whatever of unnecessary delay. If any there was, the firemen generously exerting themselves to the utmost, and the Baltimore authorities seconding their efforts to promptly respond. There were a few accidents of a minor character, but no loss of life so, far as known. There were many thrilling and dramatic incidents. For some time after it was known that the building was on fire many of the clerks remained at their desks and other employes at their usual stations, relying upon the supposed fire proof character of the building to prevent the spread of the flames, but when its real extent became known there was a hasty flight conducted in the most confusing manner, hysterical females fainting, excitable men losing their heads, and many of both classes abandoning all, including wearing apparel, save what they stood in, to escape the premature cremation that threatened the tardy ones. The great reformer at the head of the establishment, when notified of his danger and begged to flee, calmly adjusted his eye-glasses, and when it was announced that George Washington's trowsers and the basin and spoon from which he was wont to sip his pudding and milk o' nights after the day's work was done, were saved, he smiled a smile of great self-complacency and with characteristic obstinacy nestled upon sleeping in his room during the night in spite of the water that poured through the floor into the rooms below. What possible benefit he thought it could be to anybody to pass a night in a room dripping wet and rich in its possibilities of pneumonia and malarial fever passes comprehension, unless he deemed it a part of his duty as a reformer to practise the regimen he prescribed for himself as the model reformer of a reform administration.

I dare not attempt to do, explicit justice to the number of times I heard Chicago alluded to in tones sepulchrally and prophetically modulated. The imagination of some of the aged female spectators was equal, even, to the "Judgment day." Before the fire was fairly under control another broke out 30 or 40 rods east, on G street, in a livery stable, said to have been the finest of its kind south of Philadelphia. To the opportune arrival of the Baltimore companies, just in season to go into service here, and to the comparative calm, we are probably indebted for our exemption from a very disasterous conflagration. The stable with two adjoining, one each side, were in ruins in 20 minutes. All live stock saved but there were heavy losses on carriages, harnesses, feed, etc. The chief engineer of the fire department expresses himself as satisfied that the fire in the Patent-Office had been burning some hours when discovered. He believes it the work of an incendiary and no one doubts the stable was purposely fired. The burning of the Department has specially called attention to the penny wise and pound foolish policy of the Government in neglecting to provide a fire proof receptacle for preserving its archives and protecting millions of dollars worth of property in this District. It has just one engine—that at the navy yard—and I prefer to take the chances of being protected by an organization for which it has never appropriated more than a few thousand dollars, and by volunteers from abroad. E. H. K.

THE GREAT COMPOSER

A BANGOR GIRL AND LISZT—HIS LIFE—HIS PLAYING AND ITS INFLUENCE.

Miss Blanche Howard, of Bangor now in Europe, thus pleasantly writes to the Boston Transcript, of a visit to the great composer at Weimar:—

After sending our cards and receiving permission to present ourselves at an appointed and early hour, we drove to the small, cosy hamlet occupied by Liszt when here, on the out skirts of the garden of the duke of Saxe-Weimar, and were ushered by his Italian valet into a comfortable, cosy, homelike apartment, where we sat awaiting the great man's appearance. Wide casements opened upon a stretch of lawn or noble old trees, easy chairs and writing tables, MS music, with the pen lying carelessly beside it, masses of music piled up on the floor, a row of books there too, a grand piano and an upright one, a low dish of roses on the table, a carpet which let not taken for granted here as with us—altogether the easy, friendly look of a cottage drawing room at home where people have a happy use of pleasant things.

He entered the room after a few minutes, and greeted us with a charming cordiality for which we inwardly blessed the absent friend. Of course everybody knows how he looks—tall, thin, with long white hair, long, bright, robe-shaped, hanging over slight, positive but dignified manner used to courts, and a smile and grace rare in one approaching seventy. He spoke of Anna Mehlig and of several young artists just beginning their career, who he personally knew. Very gracious to the mentioned Miss Cecilia Gaul of Baltimore, spoke kindly of Miss Anna Bock, one of the youngest and most diligent of artists, and most forcibly, perhaps, of Hermann Ilse Anna Mehlig, a pupil of Schert in the Stuttgart Conservatory. "There is something in the young man," he said with emphasis, "so he charmed in the most genial way of things great and small, as if he were not of the world's geniuses in the two little things diligent nobility, that before him overcome with a consciousness of his greatness, yet quite happy and at ease as every one must be who comes with him in the sphere of his genius is his dignity."

He finally rose and went to his writing table and with one of his long, sweet smiles, so attractive in a man of his age, but why shouldn't a man grow how to smile long, sweet smiles who has had his noble, thrilling, romantic, superb work with the exception that has always a fore thing, he took a number of roses from a vase of delicate and brought it to us. Which to kiss his hand or fall on our knees we hardly know, but America's big heart has given him many tokens of emotional demonstration, we called back with the composer and appeared no doubt as if we were accustomed from earliest youth to coddling and caresses of favor from the world's great ones. But the truth is we were! A rose which stood on Liszt's writing table by his music presented by the hand that has made him famous, and received by pressing and will be sent among friends, except one perhaps that will be distributed lest by lest to the world's young friends with lists and appropriate scriptions on the street where it rests. How amiable he was indeed! The roses were much, but something more was to come. Mr. Meister played to us. For this we had not even dared hope during our three days visit. No one of course ever asks him to play and whether he does or not depends wholly on his mood. It was beautiful to sit there close by him, the soft lawns and trees in full by the open casement making a background for the tall figure, the long, pearl hands wandering over the keys, full of life and power. And how he smiles as he plays! We fancied at first in our simplicity that he was smiling at us but later it seemed merely the music in his soul illuming his countenance. His whole face changes and gleams and grows angelic, revealing the master spirit as his hands caressed while they mastered the keys.

With harrowing experiences of the difficulty of Liszt's compositions we anticipated as he began something that would stand and crush and teach us what pianos we were, but as an exquisite, soft melody filled the room, and to us came like whispers to our hearts, and a theme drawn with a tender, magical touch brought pictures and dreams of the past before us we actually forgot where we were, forgot that the white-haired man was the famous Liszt, forgot to speak as the last faint chord died away, and sat in utter silence, quite lost to our surroundings, with unseeing eyes gazing out through the casement.

At last he rose, took our hands kindly and said, "That is how I play when I play badly. I am suffering from a cold at present."

We asked if he had been improvising or if what he played were already printed.

"It was only a little nocturne," he said.

THE FAIRS THE FARMER'S SCHOOL.—Hundreds of letters come to us yearly, asking about matters and things which are very fully exhibited at the Agricultural Fairs every Fall. A farmer who observes the live stock, implements, machines, and other interesting objects at these exhibitions, and makes a study of them, will gain much valuable information. Those who attend the fairs, with their goods and live stock, are pleased to have them seen and examined. It is their business to show what they have on exhibition, and we never yet knew one of them to give an impolite or churlish reply to any civil inquiry made of them; but on the contrary, we always found them eager to impart information. Now this information is precisely what every farmer wants. He needs to be instructed about the differences in character and value of live stock, the uses and working of implements and machinery, the value of improved grains and other products, the kinds of artificial fertilizers offered by the manufacturers, and scores of other matters, not of a great interest, but of value in his daily business. Then, farmers need to meet together, and talk with one another about these things, and compare views. It is hardly possible for any two farmers so to discuss matters relating to their business without mutual benefit. The Kennebec State Fair is the place of all others for farmers to meet with one another, and also to meet those who provide them with implements and various other supplies. By all means let every farmer not only attend the fairs, but use all his faculties when there, in the effort to learn everything that is possible. A fair is a great school for the farmer and his family.

It appears by the census report of Winslow that the population of the town under such a decided increase in manufacturing interests, has been referred by the consent of both parties to Samuel W. Langley, as referee.

He had been at work the day before, through the day previous, having with his father a sawing bee in his neighborhood. He went to the pantry to drink cold water and drinks, when he fell to the floor and died in his leg.

EVENINGS AT HOME.—It is well for the household to remember that the pleasant evenings at home are strong antidotes to the practice of looking for enjoyment abroad and seeking for pleasure in lily and forbidden places; for recreation and recreation will be indulged in somehow by most men and happy are they who find it in the home circle the diversion they need. A lively game, an interesting book read aloud, or, in manifold families, a new song to be practiced will furnish pastime that will make the evening pass pleasantly. A little forethought during the day, a little pulling of wires that need not appear, will make the whole thing easy, and different ways and means may be provided for making the evening hours pass pleasantly, and a time to look forward to with pleasant anticipations. We visited once in a large family where it was the duty of each sister, in turn, to provide the evening's occupation, and there was a pleasant rivalry between them as to whose evening should be the most enjoyable. The brothers entered full into the spirit of the simple home entertainments, and were as loth to be obliged to spend an evening away from home as their sisters and parents were sorry to have them absent. Every one spoke of this family as an unusually united one, for each and every member showed such a strong attachment for the home to which each one contributed so much pleasure.

A young gentleman attached to a Western paper went to hear Miss Abbott sing, and this is the way it affected him: "Miss Abbott is beautiful as an angel and was dressed in green. Her voice is sweet as the tender accents of a mother crooning her baby to sleep, and strong as a tempest which roars in the forest and smashes the monarchs of the woody vales. Listening to her the soul is lifted on the wings of infinite joy and soars into the realms of eternal glory. When she ceased singing we fell back again to earth, and were as stunned by the concussion as though we had fallen from the top of a four-story house or been kicked in the stomach by a mule."

THE MESSAGE.

The text of the President's Message to Congress assembled in extra session is given in our despatches, and is devoid of special interest aside from its statement of the deficiencies in the appropriations caused by the revolutionary and factious course of the last Democratic House. Beyond the request for these appropriations and for provision for the repair of the Patent Office, the Message is devoted to recommending action with reference to the International Exhibition at Paris in 1878 and the International Prison Congress at Stockholm next year. The Message contains no allusion to political topics, and states that the Department Reports will be submitted at the opening of the regular session in December.

THE NET RESULT.

THE STORY OF THREE ELECTIONS

(From the Chicago Inter-Ocean.)

Here then we have the result:

Maine rises to leave her old Republican landmarks to run off after the new gospel of the President, and Maine elects her Republican State ticket by 12,000 majority.

Iowa, first of Republican States, defeats an effort to commit her to the Southern policy, and sends in a majority on the old side of 11,000.

Ohio indorses, approves, yields, and Ohio is lost. What comment is needed? What language so powerful as these potent facts to tell the story of Republican disaster, and the blunder which caused it?

The fellow who wields the mack-rake in Washington as "special correspondent" of the Boston Herald, whose recent outrageous slander upon Vice President Wheeler compelled that paper to make an editorial retraction and apology, is still at work, and coolly begins a late despatch with these words:

"As there is much curiosity in regard to Mr Blaine's point cal programme, it may be well to explain exactly what course he proposes to take in the immediate future."

The fellow then proceeds as glibly as if he were Senator Blaine's bosom friend and confidential recipient, to lay out the whole programme of the Senator's future course. We have rarely seen a more brazen piece of impudence. If the fellow who writes as if he made his headquarters in Senator Blaine's private parlor, were to be caught prowling around the kitchen area he would undoubtedly be taken by the ear by one of the servants and landed in the street.

The Boston Journal is now excitedly asking "Shall we Follow the Ohio Example?" Well, you did not exactly follow Ohio's example in the comparatively mild "indorsement" which swamped the Republican party in that State, but you went to the extreme in effusive laudation of all the "principles" and insisted that "indorsement" was the only issue in the canvass. We don't wonder you feel anxious now as to how the relative attitude of the State elections may turn out.

We suggest to the party over the way that there is no occasion to continue advertising his phony, as the public fully appreciate it.

The President was very cheerful this evening, and said he was not at all disturbed by the result in Ohio.—Washington despatch.

"I am naturally sore with loving Miss Dombey," said Mr Toots to Miss Susan Nipper, "and I know I'm wasting away. If you could see my legs when I take my boots off you could form some idea of what unrequited affection is. Do you think she cares for me?"

"Well, Mr. Toots," and Miss Nipper, "I should say not!"

"Thank you," replied Mr. Toots. "Quite of my conviction," and the little man walked "cheerfully" away. There is nothing like philosophy in either love or politics.

Miss Grundy writes to the Globe that the wit of Secretary Evarts seems to have descended to his children. The following letter, written by one of the girls, speaks volumes for the wit of the family:

DEAR PAPA—Thank you very kindly for the money you sent me. Our hen's so lonely. Won't you soon be home, papa?

"Papa" thinks that perhaps the billet was intended for the entire Administration.

The Republican organization in Georgia has formally disbanded. We are certainly doing our best as a party to conciliate our brethren.

An exchange, referring to the Republicans who failed to vote in Ohio, says they were not anxious to break their necks to get to the polls to declare that Abraham Lincoln and Jeff. Davis were equally patriotic and equally honest."

Well, brethren, looking at it by the light of the returns from Ohio and Iowa, which did not build up and strengthen the Republican party, repudiation of the policy or indorsement of B.—Des Moines State Register.

No journalist or politician, of whom we know anything, has more persistently waved the bloody shirt" than Mr. George W. Curtis. In graceful, eloquent, and often impassioned articles, Mr Curtis, up to the fourth of March, 1877, wept over the woes of the Southern Republicans—and especially the black ones. The spirit of Mr. Curtis' able editorials on the Southern question was in perfect harmony with the cartoons of his co-editor, Mr. Nast, and had a powerful effect in keeping alive what is now called sectional feeling. It would be discourteous to question the entire sincerity of what Mr. Curtis wrote up to the fourth of March, and as discourteous to question the sincerity of what he says now. He has, we presume, experienced a change of heart, but that change has not been accompanied by a confession of former errors. And yet if Mr. Curtis is right now, he was wrong but a few brief months ago.—New Haven Palladium.

EX-PRESIDENT GRANT AT NEWCASTLE. Ex-President Grant's visit to Newcastle, England, was a great local event. The Chronicle devoted nearly fourteen of its long and broad columns to a report of the reception, and eight more to a sketch of the General's life and battles. We copy the following from that paper:

Not since the great demonstration of 1873 has the grass of the town moor been covered with so vast a gathering around a platform as that assembled to witness the presentation to the General and ex-President. It is estimated that no less than 80,000 people were around the platform. . . . Never within the living memory has there been a gathering embracing so catholic a crowd. It showed to our minds how deeply imbued in us is the sentiment of freedom, for that was the sentiment which brought over the thousands of Tynesiders to do honor on Saturday to one who had been the instrument of enlarging the liberty of the human race, and who was, besides, the representative of a great Nation justly famed for the liberal laws under which its people live. The cheers which have greeted General Grant on Tyneside, and which to-day on the banks of another river will greet him again, are evidences of our respect and admiration of an eminent soldier and an honest man, but they are also evidences of our good feeling towards a great country.

SHAKESPEARE IN POLITICS.

(From the Chicago Inter-Ocean.)

SCENE, Rochester Court—Enter Fluellen, Conkling and Gower Platt.

Gower—Nay, that is right; but why wear you your leek to-day? St. Davy's Day is past.

Conkling Fluellen—I will tell you as my friend, the rascally, beggarly, prattling knave Pistol, which also, we saw yesterday, look you, and pluff me cut my leek; it was a place where I could not breed no contentions with him; but I will be so pold as to wear it in my cap till I see him once again, and then I will tell him a little piece of my desires.

Enter Pistol.

Gower—Why, here he comes, swelling like a turkey cock.

Conkling Fluellen—'Tis no matter for his swellings, nor his turkey-cocks. Go, plese you, ancient Pistol? You scurvy, lony knave! Gut pless you!

Curtis Pistol—Ha! art thou Bedlam? Hence, base Trojan. I am gualmsh at the smell of leek.

Conkling Fluellen—I prech you, scarvy, lonsy knave, at my requests to eat, look you, this leek; because you do not love it, and your digestions do not agree with it, I would desire you to eat it.

Curtis Pistol—Not for Cadwallader and all his goats!

Conkling Fluellen—There is one goat for you. (Strikes him.)

Curtis Pistol—Base Trojan, thou shalt die.

Conkling Fluellen—You say very true, when Gots will is. I will desire you to live meantime, and eat your vletals. (Striking him again.) Fall to; if you can mock a leek you can eat a leek.

Gower—Enough, Captain, you have astonished him.

Conkling Fluellen—I will make him eat my leek or I will beat his pate four days. Pite, I pray you.

Curtis Pistol—Must I bite?

Conkling Fluellen—Yes, and out of doubts, pool.

Curtis Pistol (Taking leek)—By this leek I swear I will most terrible revenge—

Conkling Fluellen—Eat! (Striking him.)

Curtis Pistol—Order thy budget, thou dest see I eat.

Conkling Fluellen—Much good may it do you! Nay, throw none away. Then when next you see leeks I pray you mock at them! God be wi' you and keep your pate.—(Exit.)

Curtis Pistol—All hell shall stir for this. (Goes and calls an indignation meeting.)

PERISTALTIC LOZENGES.

The effects of

COSTIVENESS

When long continued are painful in the extreme, leading to piles, nausea of sickness of the stomach, general uneasiness in the abdominal region, congestion of the liver, and from an impeded circulation of the blood, colds, and especially the

PILES.

The grand peculiar quality of Dyspepsia is debility of the stomach. The debility of the liver is expressed from the small quantity of bile discharged into the intestines, causing a sluggish action on the right side. Under whichever form

DYSPEPSIA

Appears it is always a language of debility, overexertion of the brain, fatigue, the sleep disturbed, the extremities cold, the tongue for the most part furred or coated, constipation, nervous irritability, and generally speaking, a debilitated state of the general health.

It is evident, that some agent is required to stimulate to the proper action the stomach, bowels, and glands, joined with a tonic, to the tone of the liver and gradually the stomach, must be resorted to to reach the cause. That this is the proof of which we are happy to say, therefore disappointed, little sufferers, who have tried in their profusion, are those to whom the Peristaltic Lozenges are recommended.

These Lozenges will repel by the exercise of those efficient Pills, which the country has for years been flooded. They are so agreeable to the taste, and convenient in form, that children can take them readily after rejecting the usual nauseous medicines. In these symptoms slight, self to indicate the presence of Worms, they are a proper remedy.

Price 50 and 60 cents. For sale by druggists, or by that on receipt of price in P. O. stamps or money.

TESTIMONIALS.

I regard Mr. Eddy as one of the most capable and successful practitioners with whom I have had official intercourse.

CHAS. MASON, Commissioner of Patents.

"Invention cannot employ a person more trustworthy or more capable of securing for them an early and favorable consideration at the Patent Office."

MOSES W. ODELL, late Commissioner of Patents.

Boston, October 15, 1870.

R. H. EDDY, Esq.—Dear Sir: I have pleasure in stating that in 1860 my first patent, upon which you prosecuted for me and advised me in a hundred times, has been sustained in a long contest in the courts, and preserved many millions to my employer, upon which I have received royalty. I have occasionally employed other agencies in New York, Philadelphia and Washington, but I will give you this testimonial, as I believe, of your fidelity and ability to secure to me the best results attainable under the laws.

Yours truly, GEORGE BRAYTON.
